A condensed black grotesk with soft corners, slit counters and clean joins. Built for headlines that carry a wall.

Tulla is the Albanian word for bricks. Every letter is laid from the same few parts: a heavy stem, a soft corner and a slit counter that keeps the black from closing up. The result packs tight and still reads at a distance. It works where a headline has to hold the whole page: posters, packaging, signs and the first screen of a website.
